Boycott Set by Air Control In Azores

From Agency Disputches.

LISBON — Citing safety and solidarity, Portuguese air traffic controllers ignored international pressure and proceeded with plans for a 48-hour boycott of flights to and from the United States beginning at midnight Sunday, Green-wich Mean Time.

the boycott would be "slight, maybe nonexistent

A spokesman for the Portuguese Air Traffic Controllers Association said Sunday that its 300 government-salaried members wanted to express support for their 12,000 striking colleagues in the United States. The spokesman said the association's members also were concerned about "lack of safety" caused by the strike.

The Portuguese boycott coincides with the start of the third week of the strike for better pay and benefits by the U.S. Profes-sional Air Traffic Controllers Or-ganization (PATCO).

The FAA added three extra air lanes to the southernmost part of the North Atlantic route, handled by Canadian controllers, to replace the southern transatlantic route controlled by the Portuguese through the Azores.

The extra lanes can handle 14 flights an hour, 10 in one direction and four in the other, reversing the flow depending on demand, an FAA spokesman said. This is more than enough to cope with the 40 to 50 flights a day handled by the Portuguese, he said.

The International Federation of Air Traffic Controllers Associations, a 61-member body, recommended Thursday that any planned sympathy actions be can-Portugual's controllers. scaled down their scheduled boycott from a week to 48 hours after the federation's appeal, but they refused to cancel the protest.

There were no signs Sunday of PATCO or the Reagan administration being ready to concede any ground in the strike. The government won a victory Friday when a federal legal official recommended that the union be stripped of its bargaining authority because the strike was illegal.

The administration says there is no safety problem posed by the use of nonstrikers, supervisors and military personnel to replace the striking controllers.

said only U.S. flights passing over the Azores would be affected by the Portuguese boycott. A Trans World Airlines spokesman said TWA flights between the United States and Portugal would be delayed but not canceled.

Neutron Decision Viewed as Undercutting Haig

By Bernard Gwertzman.

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — President
Reagan's decision to order the assembling and stockpiling of neutron weapons — overruling arguments for delay by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.—had many members of Washington's diplomatic community asking last week. "Who's in charge of ing last week, "Who's in charge of foreign policy here?"
The president's action had the effect, at least for the present, of diminishing Mr. Haig's standing and elevating Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who had argued for going ahead with the neutron bomb.

This has edirect impact on the allies," a European diplomat said. "What are we to think when we read that Haig flashed a red light and Weinberger a green one, and the president drove through?"

Unsettling as it was, it seemed at first that the neutron debate might be only a warmup for a contest this week, when both secretaries confer with the vacationing president in California about the strategic nuclear portion of the Pentagon's proposed $1.5-trillion, fiveyear spending program.

Troublesome Proposal

But there were reports Saturday that the defense secretary, faced with opposition not only from Mr. Haig but also from key military and congressional leaders, was re-A controller at Lisbon Airport considering the proposal that was causing the most trouble — the one to deploy MX missiles aboard planes, rather than in shelters on the ground. Mr. Haig, testy and often apparently nervous and high-strung, has spent most of the last decade working on questions of foreign working on questions of foreign policy and national security, first in Washington and then as commander in chief of NATO. He therefore has an instinctive sympathy for European and other allies and does not have to be reminded of the need to consult them and take their problems into account.

Mr. Weinberger, a personable and, on the surface, affable man, had no experience in international affairs before his appointment as defense secretary. But he is a political confidant of Mr. Reagan and has had extensive experience in running complex domestic agencies, including the old Department of Health, Education and Welfare. He has a bent, his critics say, toward intellectual arrogance and has tended to either forget or disregard allied political problems in his work as the Pentagon chief.

On the MX missile question, Mr. Haig has been aware that dropping the Carter administra-tion's land-based system would be sure to make waves in Europe. The allies, in the State Department view, would ask why they should deploy new generations of landbased U.S. medium-range missiles on their soil if the United States is unwilling to put the MX on its own. The very size of the contemplated Weinberger strategic program — one estimate places it at $200 billion over five years — also inevitably raises questions of its effect on any effort to reach understandings with the Soviet Union.

is also said to believe that the air-borne MX would be militarily heart not only of foreign policy but of domestic politics as well. That is why the decisions are so foolish.

Although the neutron bomb decision seemed to place Mr. Weinberger in the ascendancy, Mr. Haig's aides insisted that the significance of the president's decision should not be exaggerated. They said Mr. Haig did not argue against the weapon itself, but rather advised the president that an announcement now would cause severe difficulties for allies, such as West German Chancellor Helmnt Schmidt, who are already

Moscow Communiqué Eases Stand on Poland

New York Times Service MOSCOW - Talks between Polish and Soviet leaders in the Crimea ended over the weekend with the publication of a strikingly conciliatory communiqué.

The document seemed to adopt a restrained tone toward the Poles' efforts to end months of turmoil and restore political and economic stability. ft was notable for the absence of Soviet formulations used in recent months to remind the Poles of their vulnerability to Soviet armed might.

Moreover, the Soviet Union committed itself to increase its already substantial aid to the Polish economy. The Soviet leaders agreed to defer the payment of Polish debts until the next five-year period, 1986-90, and to supply additional raw materials and industrial goods.

Moscow will also "facilitate a more comprehensive utilization of Poland's industrial potential," the document said.

Option Rejected

Western diplomats said that this Soviet commitment indicated that the Kremlin had rejected the option of allowing economic stagna-tion in Poland to worsen in the expectation that it would bring back-lash against Solidarity.

The communique was issued on Saturday after Polish Communist Party leader, Stanislaw Kania, returned to Warsaw. He was accompanied by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzel-ski, the Polish premier and defense minister. They met with a group of Soviet leaders led by the president and party leader, Leonid I. Brezhnev, who maintains a vacation retreat in the Crimea, Mr. Brezhnev was flanked in the talks by Konstantin U. Chernenko, a member of the 14-man Soviet Politbu-ro, and by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

The document, published simultaneously in Moscow and Warsaw, depicted the situation in Poland in pendent trade union Solidarity, but it said that recent strikes and demonstrations fomented by "forces hostile to Socialism" had contributed to "a serious threat to the security of the state, its inde-pendence and to the vital interests of the Polish people." However, the document repre-sented the Soviet Union as backing the Polish party in its efforts to gain control of the situation. It described the Polish leaders' 24-hour visit as having "passed in the at-mosphere of fraternal friendship and comradely mutual under-standing," a sharp break from the come routine in Soviet propagan-da. It did not mention the inde-summer when it accused the Warsaw leadership of surrendering to anti-Communists and lent its support to a bid by hard-liners to unseat Mr. Kania.

Polish Congress' Program

The communiqué appeared to endorse the program adopted by the emergency congress of the Polish party last month, saying that it had met "with the ever wider support of millions of working peo-ple." However, by stressing the congress' commitment to "Marxist-Leninist principles," and to the strengthening of the party's "guid-

Solidarity had urged that the march be called off, saying it might be used to draw the independent union into fresh conflict with the Communist Party, Safety of the marchers also could not be guaranteed, Solidarity added, Soli-darity officials reminded the march's organizers that dozens of people were killed in 1970 and 1976 when demonstrations erupted into street riots.

Supporters of the march include those who are demanding the re-lease of three members of an anti-Communist nationalist group called the Confederation of Independent Poland, headed by Leszek Moczulski. They were arrested last fall, released on bail in June but arrested again on the order of Po-land's highest court.

by Louis Luyt, chairman and chief executive officer of the South Africa-based company Triomf Fertilizer, "for upgrading coaching and refereeing." Mr. Luyt confirmed the grant in a statement to Caryle Murphy, the Washington Post correspondent in Johannesburg, and asserted that there was nothing improper about the donation.

Influence-Buying Scandal

Richard Lapchick, one of the organizers of the Stop Apartheid Rugby Tour Coalition, which received documents about the donation from dissident rugby union members, believes the Luyt contribution is "part of a major South African effort to use money to break the international sports boycott." He cites large purses being offered to American boxers, golfers and other athletes for competing in South Africa. The coalition describes itself as

Mr. Luyt was a key figure in the worldwide South African public relations drive that produced a scandal in the late 1970s. The operation used secret Information Department funds to buy influence, at home and abroad, until press exposés uncovered the story, forcing former Prime Minister John Vorster from office.

Official inquiries at the time identified Mr. Luyt as the conduit for about $15 million in secret funds for The Citizen, a pro-government English-language newspa-per he established in 1976.

Mr. Lays, a former rugby forward, helped establish the Committee for Fairness in Sport, another recipient of government funds in South Africa's information scandal. According to a budget document prepared by the Information Department that surfaced earlier this year, the committee was to receive $175,000 in secret funding in 1978-79.

'He was also named in 1976 as one of five millionaire backers of the Club of Ten, an Information Department project that placed pro-South African advertisements in European and North American newspapers beginning in 1974.

Mr. Luyt said in Johannesburg that he provided the $25,000 from his personal funds at the request of the U.S. rugby group's president. Tom Selfridge. He said the money had already been spent and therereductions enacted amid controversy earlier this summer, and they are likely to include proposed cuts in Social Security and changes in Administration officials said refinancing welfare programs, the of- cent developments had forced the size of the deficit would be, beficials said. Defense Decisions

The budget problems also underscore the urgency of a National Security Council meeting, which the president has scheduled for Monday in Los Angeles, to discuss proposals to expand the nation's nuclear deterrent forces. More than ever, the officials said, decisions on whether to embark on a mobile missile system or longrange bomber will hinge on the need to bold down spending.

Only last Thursday the presi-dent signed into law the economic

Reagan Speaking Softly to Japanese on Military Spending

Washington's outwardly conciliatory approach contrasts with the tough talk adopted by Carter administration officials in an attempt to badger Tokyo into speeding up its military spending, the smallest outlay of any of the U.S. allies. Despite this shift in strategy, however, U.S. officials remain determined to get Japan to strengthen its forces to help offset the burden of U.S. military commitments in the Pacific. Continued Japanese reluctance to spend on the military, well-placed sources in the administration and Congress suggested, could emerge as the area of most serious conflict in the hroad political and economic relations between the two nations.

Despite this shift in strategy, funds, combined with the absence of a clear popular mandate for ex-panded military programs, indi-cates that Tokyo's military spending will continue to be substantially less than Washington desires.

Problems in Congress

The flash point in two-way ties could come, these sources suggest-ed, when Congress begins delibera-tions next year on the 1983 budget and politicians are obliged to support the large-scale military spend-ing program endorsed by the Reagan administration at the expense of spending programs favor-ing their constituents.

The Saudi plan was presented a gested, could again ignite com-plaints from congressional critics and elements in the American public who charge that Japan is taking a free economic ride on the back of U.S. military protection.

In attempting to put the best possible face on relations with Tocyo while keeping up strong be-hind-the-scenes pressure, Reagan administration officials say they hope to persuade the Japanese to build an effective fighting force ca-pable of defending the home islands, the sea-lanes and the air around Japan from conventional attack by 1990.

Reached an Impasse

Relations reached an acrimonious impasse late last year when former Defénse Secretary Harold Brown and other Carter administration officials were led to believe that Tokyo would increase its military spending in 1981 by at least 9.7 percent. The final figure was 7.6 percent, and Mr. Brown charged publicly that Japan was week ago by Crown Prince Fahd and called for, among other things, the retrenchment of Israel to its shirking.

In contrast, the Japanese Cabinet's announcement in June of plans to hold the figure for 1982 to 7.5 percent barely raised a ripple of public protest in Washington. "We've found it more useful to discuss matters quietly and out of the limelight," said a senior U.S. official. He said it is obvious that the Carter administration not only did not get anywhere but also may have taken "a couple of steps back."

U.S. officials said talks between Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Japanese Foreign Minister Sunao Sonoda in New York last month marked a turning point in the common assessmen of the dangers posed by the Soviet military presence in the Pacific.

But while Mr. Haig and Mr. Sonoda "saw eye to eye on the strategic situation," the official said, "changes won't take place overnight." The United States, he explained, recognizes the problems the Japanese face in building a na-tional consensus on defense after more than three decades of pacifism. The Soviet buildup has forced the Japanese to shed some of their anti-war sentiments, hut "too hasty a change in policy has the danger of leaving public opin-ion behind," this official said.

More Flexibility

The Reagan administration's softer line, U.S. officials suggested, is intended to give politicians in Tokyo, in the unobtrusive style of Japanese politics, more flexibility in creating the necessary national consensus on defense free from the kind of public opinion backlash that overt American pressure can arouse in Japan's society. U.S. officials are privately concerned, however, that the signals from Washington may be used as an excuse for complacency rather than taken as a message to begin in earnest to undertake a more substantial defense hurden.

"Often the Japanese only think about what will make the Americans happy this year and not about the long-term importance of their defense policies," one administra-tion official said.

"The problem we face," ex-plained a senior U.S. official, "is that we are meeting longer-range strategic requirements in view of the cumulative effects of higher Soviet [military] spending ... and the political requirements in seeing some equity in sharing the burden to meet the challenge."

NEW SALT NEGOTIATOR - Edward L. Rowny, right, was sworn in as the chief U.S.

SALT negotiator by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., as his wife, Rita, and a State: Department aide looked on. Mr. Rowny helped negotiate the SALT-2 pact on strategic arms limitation with the Soviet Union in 1979, but later said that it was inequitable.

Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader; and Eugene V. Rostow, the new arms control director, said the administration was eager to re-sume arms control talks without preconditions. But these remarks were offset by Mr. Reagan's other comments about the Soviet Union. I can understand their anguish, he said. "They are squealing like they're sitting on a sharp nail simply because we now are showing the world that we are not going to let them get to the point of dominance where they can someday issue to the free world an ultimatum of surrender or die."

Such statements are sure to produce concern in Europe, which sees itself as the eventual battle-field in any U.S.-Soviet conflict. It is not easy to persuade the Europeans to increase their defense spending; to assure them of Washington's commitment to negotiated agreements with Moscow; to avoid public splits when the Europeans

U.S. Mix-Up Fails to Amuse Mauritania

Press Confused Over CIA Plan to Fight Libyan Influence in Mauritius

By Michael Getler Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - A CIA covert action plan that upset a congressional committee, combined with a mix-up in the press about which country was the plan's target, has caused a headache for the Reagan administration and for the government of Manri-

Informed sources say the actual target of the proposed CIA action was Mauritius, an island in the Indian Ocean off the southeast coast of Africa, not Mauritania, a large country on the northwest coast of Africa.

These sources say the plan involving Mauritius did not envisage cloak-and-dagger ac-tion but was mainly a CIA effort to slip money to the government there to help counteract financial aid being supplied to forces opposing the government by the Libyan ruler, Col. Moamer Qadhafi.

The episode began to unfold publicly July 25 when The Washington Post reported that the House Select Committee on Intelligence, in a highly unusual move, had written to President Reagan objecting to a planned se-cret CIA operation in Africa.

The stories' sources did not disclose what country was involved. The White House and the committee confirmed that such a letter had been written.

The next day, advance copies of Newsweek magazine's Aug. 3 issue reported that the committee had objected to a large-scale operation to overthrow Col. Qadhafi, with the ultimate goal of removing him from power, a description which to some implied assassination. The White House denied the Newsweek report.

Then on July 28, a Washington Post story, attributed to administration officials, said the operation was planned against Mauritania, not Libya.

Hoors after that story appeared, "the Mauritanians, justifiably, went up the wall," one informant says, and demanded explanations at the State Department and from U.S. officials in their country.

Mauritanians Unconvinced

At first, U.S. officials tried to tell Mauritania that they could not discuss alleged or real covert actions; then they tried to convince them that the press account was wrong. One source says the United States still is not sure the Mauritanians believe the explana-

This source says the designation in the press of Mauritania probably came about because of confusion in the names of the two countries, both of which are relatively obscure to Americans.

On Ang. 4. The Wall Street Journal wrote it correctly, but not many people noticed. Amid a story about the then forthcoming visit of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, the Journal noted that the "administration's concern about Qadhali is so great that key congressmen have been briefed on a covert U.S. operation planned to check Libyan influence in Mauritius, an island in the Indian Ocean that the U.S. feared could become a Soviet naval base."

Still, the overt battle over covert activities continued. In its Aug. 10 edition, Time magazine called Newsweek's account of the plot against Col. Qadhafi "misinformation" leaked to Newsweek by "CIA sources," apparently to discredit CIA Director William J. Casey and Max C. Hugel, then the CIA's director of operations.

Time said CIA sources also were spreading the leak about Mauritania but that the actual plan that drew congressional objection was a much broader CIA action to shore up U.S. interests in the Middle East and North Africa.

In its Aug. 10 edition, Newsweck said the schemes" against Libya had been discussed with the House committee but it reported confusion on the committee about whether the protest letter involved Libya or another controversial operation in the Third World.

Several sources have suggested privately that there clearly is widespread interest with-in the administration and the intelligence community in complicating Col. Qadhafi's life and that various plans have been discussed. These sources suggest that they do not involve covert U.S. actions against Col.

Pakistan Makes Arrests in Crackdown on State Airline

KARACHI, Pakistan - Pakistan's military authorities arrested a number of union officials and employees in the state-run airline Sunday in a move aimed at cutting ont corruption and inefficiency, the government announced.

Some senior managers were fired and late-night raids were made on airports and offices of Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) throughout the country as part of a major government drive. A government statement said the military authorities acted because PIA was on the verge of collapse because of financial losses.

Union offices were sealed; union activities by the airline's 22,000 employees, ranging from pilots to cleaners, were banned; and the penalty for disobeying was set at five years in jail or five lasbes with a whip, or both.

Paramilitary police were on dury at major airports throughout the country after raids Saturday night in which office records and other materials were seized. Airline employees said several dozen of their colleagues, including some union officials, had been arrested. Troops also were on standby in case of trouble, but they did not take part in the raids. Stringent security checks were in force for all domestic and international passengers, causing flight delays of more PIA provides technical and

Mr. Rahim said the government acted after receiving two special reports on PIA that found that it employed two to three times more staff than do comparable national airlines. "Frankly, we do not even know the exact oumber of people PIA employs," he said.

The crackdown was the latest step by President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq to make state-run corporations more efficient. Reagan Plans to Ease Nuclear Plant Curbs

By Irvin Molotsky New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration's long-awaited policy on nuclear power, to be anoounced next month, will specify an intention to "move expeditiously but wisely" in removing federal barriers to its wider use, according to a draft of the president's state-

An aide said the draft would essentially make up the final statement. If so, Mr. Reagan will call for these policy changes:

· Removal of obstacles to the construction of the current generation of nuclear reactors.

• Development of the breeder reactor, which in theory would produce more nuclear fuel than it consumes. This move was revealed earlier in the administration's efforts to win votes for its budget proposals from Tennessee congressmen. That is where the reactor would be built.

· Lifting the ban on commercial reprocessing of spent reactor

The president's nuclear policy statement was drafted by the White House's Office of Science and Technology Policy. The nff-ice's director, George A. Keyworth 2d, said he expected Mr. Reagan to approve it, with some "final tuning," after returning from Cali-

Peter Bradford, a Democratic member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission faulted the draft because it failed to mention the accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant, and the resulting safety concerns, as among the factors that have caused delays in licensing of nuclear plants. Mr. Keyworth said the policy statement was intended to be "rather global in nature" and the concerns over Three Mile Island were too specif-ties to make buge investments in reactors in the face of the lower need projected for electrical pow-

Rep. Udall and Mr. Bradford were joined in their criticism by Democratic representatives, Edward J. Markey of Massachu-setts and Toby Moffett of Con-necticut, both of whom head subcommittees concerned with nucle-

"This is oot a policy statement," Rep. Markey said. "It reads like a wish list for the nuclear lobby."

The draft of the president's policy statement declares that ouclear power has been handicapped in the past decade by a morass of federal obstacles, including unnecessary regulations that do not enhance safety but cause extensive licensing delays and economic uncertainty. If nuclear power development remains stalled, the statement reads, consumers may face electric sbortages and higher costs than oecessary. "It is important that our ouclear industry be revitalized to avoid the dismal prospect of importing this essential technology. first invented and demonstrated in America, from abroad," it con-

Mr. Bradford, who is on record as advocating further study on the safety of ouclear technology before going ahead with the licensing and construction of additional plants, said in rebuttal that the United States has more nuclear plants than the rest of the free world.

Regarding the expressed goal of removing obstacles to the building of reactors, the draft says: "It is presently taking some 10 to 14 years to proceed from the planning stage to an operating license for new nuclear power plants. The process must be streamlined with the objective of shortening the time involved to perhaps six to eight years, as is typical in many

"Consequently, 1 am directing the secretary of energy, in coordination with the vice president as chairman of the Task Force on Regulatory Relief, to give immediate priority attention to improving the nuclear regulatory and licensing process. I anticipate that the chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission will take steps to facilitate the licensing of plants under construction and those awaiting licenses."

Problems at Sites

Rep. Moffett said in response, "Of 10 reactor applications studied at hearings, only two are ready to go on line right now — Diablo Canyon in California, which has been delayed by labor disputes and construction problems, and McGuire near Charlotte, N.C., which has had design problems." He said the other eight were behind schedule mostly because the utilities building them had been overly optimistic about completion

He said the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is so undermanned that only 60 percent of required in-spections for existing plants are being carried out now. The projected cost of the delays, he said, is less than the cost of the Three Mile Island cleanup, and he labeled the administration's plans to speed up licensing "a narrow and shortsighted view."

Rep. Markey said Mr. Reagan is hooking up "a government lifesupport system to a dead todustry." He predicted that the proposals would be rejected by Congress.

Sale of Woman Creates Sensation in India

Beyond Controversy Over Human Traffic Is Question of Her Fate

By Michael T. Kaufman

NEW DELHI — Three months ago. Ashwini Sarin, a reporter for The Indian Express, India's largest-circulation daily, purchased a woman for $306 and wrote about

His series began: "Yesterday, I hought a short-statured skinny woman helonging to a village near Shivpuri in Madhya Pradesh for 2.300 rupees. Even I find it hard to believe that I have returned to the capital this morning after huying the middle-aged woman for half the price one pays for a buffalo in the Punjab."

Now, after the sensation has died away, Kamla, the woman, is confined to an orphanage whose restrictions and religious workers she resents. For their part, the directors of the orphanage find her iroublesome and wish her to leave. Her rescuers can think of no hetter place to put her and have petitioned the Supreme Court to look into what the newspaper says is widespread traffic in women and to find some suitable place for Kamla's rehabilitation.

The court is studying the petition and in the meantime has or-

Kamla, who is confused by what has happened to her, is clear on several things. She thinks it is up to the people who bought her to take care of her, and she wants to leave the orphanage, where she is not allowed to smoke bidis, the hand-rolled cigarettes she enjoys. She wants to work for the people who bought her and is proud she commanded so high a price.

Strikers Defy Official Ban,

NEW DELHI - India's northeastern state of Assam was paralyzed by a 24-hour general strike in defiance of a government ban on stoppages in the state for six months.

In the only violent incident during the strike, a bomh exploded Saturday on a railway line at Pandu. The track was damaged, hut no casualties were reported.

The strike in the oil-producing state, which began Friday, was called by leaders of a 22-monthold campaign for the expulsioo of illegal immigrants, most of whom are from Bangladesh. More than 290 persons have died in the student-led agitation, which has crippled the state's economy. At one point, demonstrators stopped the flow of oil from Assam to the rest of the country, costing India at least $1.25 billion to replace the domestie oil with foreign imports.

The general strike was also staged to protest the official announcement that India's government had invoked the new antistrike measures. The Press Trust of deter hoarders had reported that armed police domestic prices.

In New Delhi on Saturday, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said the measure to prohibit strikes in essential services had been misunderstood. The government does not intend to suppress the working class, she said in a speech marking the 34th anniversary of India's independence, hut stoppages in some services will mean untold hardship for people, Mrs. Gandhi also warned Indians to be extra vigilant because of what she called the piling up of arms in the region. She did not mention Pakistan by name hut clearly was referring to that country when she said. "The piling up arms in India's neighborhood poses a danger to all." She also said the government had halted the upward trend in prices, which she blamed in part on hoarding, black marketeering and profiteering.

Miss Kapoor, who sought to re-construct Kamla's life, said she is very evasive about her family. She told the reporter that she had been sold hy her brother-in-law after she became a widow. Miss Kapoor, however, now believes that Kamla was sold hy her hushand and that much of her story is subterfuge aimed at hiding this shame.

In any case, in three months no one here has definitely established the woman's age, her family, her native village or her full name.

Mr. Sarin, who bought her, spent nine months on the assignment, traveling to rural centers and posing as a doctor with a large family who was looking for a wife for his farm foreman. After gaining the confidence of traders, be sealed the deal in a meeting that took place across the street from the police station in Morena.

In the course of his investigation, Mr. Sarin said, he learned that trade in women was widespread, with some sold as servants and others as prostitutes. He said prices ranged up to 21,000 rupees, or $2,800, which was asked for a 15-year-old girl.

Squatters Near Cape Town Are Offered Resettlement

CAPE TOWN — Seeking a solution to a confrontation between the government and hlack squatters in the Cape Town area. Pieter G.J. Koomhof, the minister of black affairs, has announced a plan to settle many of the squatters elsewhere in the country if they cooperate and register with the au-

Mr. Koornhof, who heads the Ministry of Cooperation and Development, announced Saturday that efforts would be made to find jobs and housing in the inland provinces of Transvaal and Orange Free State if the squatters would leave the Cape Town area, where their presence is illegal. The program was proposed after police last Tuesday destroyed plas-tic-and-wood shelters that were erected a few days earlier in a squatter area known as Nyanga. The raid, on a stormy winter day, provoked condemnation from critics of South Africa's racial policies. Resettlement of squatters and their families has been proposed before, but squatters' committees have always argued that the gov-erament should not divide their communities.

The 400 wives and children who camped at Nyanga, families of black workers in the Cape area, are without shelter on the sand flats on the Atlantic coast west of Cape Town. After denying the squatters food, authorities are now allowing church groups to provide them with hot meals. The weather has moderated, but the squatter area is always windswept. At night, the people huddle in blankets around scrap-wood fires. Under South Africa's stern laws governing the movement of nonwhites, blacks who want to work in white cities usually must sign contracts that require them to leave their families in the tribal homelands. Although blacks living on the fringes of Cape Town live mainly in barracks, many men smuggle in their wives and chil-dren to live with them in "single" quarters. The women and children had been evicted from these quarters and put up the plastic shelters, which were donated by churches and other groups.

Mr. Koornhof said that under his proposal, the squatters must cooperate with authorities, abandon their squatting and report to processing centers. Only then will authorities try to find work for eligible men where family housing is available, he said.

The failure to end the Maze prison hunger strike has given the IRA a major propaganda victory and boosted its fund-raising in the United States, Mr. FitzGerald said in a television interview.

The sooner the hunger strike "can be resolved and the sooner the IRA gains can we wiped out, eliminated, the better," he said.

"I appreciate the IRA are a threat to our government, to our democracy and not a threat to Britain. It's we who have to live with them, it is we who have to fight them and save democracy here - and we've often got very little help from British govern-ments, which have at times negotiated with them.

Acknowledgment Urged

In private discussions, British politicians "freely recognize that the ultimate solution that would be desirable would be one that would bring North and South together, and Britain could disengage." Mr. FitzGerald said.

"I think it would be belpful if they did say that in public for this reason — that I think Northern Unionisis are often misled into believing by the public attitude of the British politicians that there exists a strong feeling for the union in Britain," he said. Reaganites' Administration of Austerity Is Conspicuously Rich in Big Spenders

By Lynn Rosellini New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — William French Smith tied on his black tie, stepped into a chauffeured sedan and went to a party.

The evening was marked by strolling musicians, silver candelabra, trees strung with decorative lights and a dinner for 250 under a green-and-white-striped tent on the Mall. In addition to Attorney General Smith, there were lots of other Cabinet members, White House officials and important Republicans, which is not surprising.

In Ronald Reaga ton, many Republicans go to parties six nights a week. They ride ahout town in chauffeured limousines. They live in the most expensive sections of town and have vacation homes in California and Maine.

As officials and advisers and friends of President Reagan they endorse austerity in federal spending, but in their personal lives many of the most visible people in the administration have shown a fondness for conspicuous spending of their own money in their first six months in Washington.

When they arrived in January. the Reagan Republicans, many of them successful in business and industry, brought with them a way of life that emphasizes good living and the use of social occasions to smooth professional relations.

Work Hard, Play Hard

James A. Baker 3d, White House chief of staff, lives in a $715,000 house. Caspar W. Wein-herger, secretary of defense, has a $707,000 house with a swimming pool. Treasury Secretary Donald T. on the new style, the White House has attempted to play down the Reagans' free-spending image. For example, a proposal to buy a new presidential yacht was scuttled after it was deemed inappropriate. But if the Reagans themselves are sensitive about their image, others connected with the administration.

Ben Fordney, a U.S. Embassy spokesman, said there had been a significant increase in violent crime against Americans here, with 51 cases reported since November. The homes of 17 embassy employces have been burglarized. In addition to the four Americans previously killed, nine — including some officials — have been seriously injured.

All U.S. Embassy houses here have night watchmen, steel gates, and a steel grate on the door of the bedroom, thus giving a measure of protection even if burglars enter, Mr. Fordney said. Often armed with weapons smuggled out of neighboring Uganda, the thieves in one recent incident used sledgehammers to batter down security doors while neighbors cowered in their houses.

The rising level of violent crime is not limited to Kenya. Tanzania and Zambia have experienced similar incidents, often explained as the consequence of an economic decline and rising unemployment. Uganda, still trying to recover from eight years of chaos under Idi Amin, is probably Africa's most dangerous country.

Nairobi is a UN regional headquarters, so it has a large, well-todo foreign community in addition to many wealthy Asian businessmen. Kenya also has black Africa's most developed tourist industry, with almost 400,000 visitors yearly. The major hotels warn visitors not to walk the streets after dark.

Nairobi has almost doubled in population to about 800,000 in the past decade, bringing an influx of jobless and beggars. Although many black Kenyans have prospered in the 18 years since in dependence, the division between wealthy and poor is wider here than in many African countries.

As a deviser of exhibitions, Mr. Barr lured the public with spectacular and well-researched shows, ranging from the "high" art of Matisse and Picasso to displays of such mundane objects as typewrit-ers and gasoline pumps. With a sense of historical importance, he proved a sharp acquisitor. And with a lucid style not given to every scholar, he wrote a number of works on modern art, some of which became classics.

Under his guidance, the museum - whose radical, multidepartmental plan he conceived -- developed into an extraordinary visual anthology of contemporary civilization and the most important center for 20th-century art in the world. Reaching far beyond the

After earning a bachelor's de-gree in 1922 and a master's degree the next year, he embarked on a five-year plan, involving a different job each year. Subsequently, Mr. Barr taught at Harvard (where he later received a Ph.D.), Princeton and Wellesley, At Wellesley, in 1926, he inaugurated the first college course in the United States devoted exclusively to modern art. The course covered both visual and performing arts --- painting, sculpture, film, photography, the the-ater and the design of man-made objects, with an occasional look at music and literature - and stressed their interrelatiooships. On a trip to Europe in 1927, he discovered the Bauhaus, the innovative German design school founded by Walter Gropius, which reinforced his ideas and became, in fact, a spiritual ancestor of the Museum of Modern Art.

Meanwhile in New York, Abby Aldrich Rockefeller, Lizzie P. Bliss and Mary Sullivan were planning a museum of modern art. A member of their committee, Paul J. Sachs. Harvard's Fogg Museum, who had taught Mr. Barr as a graduate student, recommended his former pupil for the post of director.

Nicaragua, Lost and Found

Not too long ago, the Reagan administra-tion seemed ready to declare Nicaragua lost conservatives in Nicaragua with their luketo the Soviet camp. Nicaraguan military aid to El Salvador's guerrillas was denounced. U.S. economic aid was suspended, and the Carter policy of close cooperation with non-Sandinista revolutionaries was cast aside.

Now it appears Nicaragua has again been found. Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders, who is in charge of hemisphere policy, has visited Managua and reopened communication with government officials and non-Sandinistas. He offered to improve relations in exchange for restraint in Nicaragua's foreign policies.

The implication is that the Reagan administration understands that Nicaragua is not yet another Cuba, and that constructive U.S. involvement can reduce the odds of its becoming one.

Washington's suspicions of the two-yearold Sandinista government are obviously reciprocated. The Sandinistas feel themselves rehels in the Castro tradition. They identify with the guerrillas battling a U.S.-supported warm tolerance of the private sector and with repression of "counterrevolution."

But the Sandinistas also seem eager to learn from Cuba's mistakes, particularly its costly economic and military dependence on the Soviet Union. They may therefore be prepared to avoid entanglement in El Salvador and to limit their anti-U.S. rhetoric and the stockpiling of Soviet arms.

Such an accommodation on foreign policy questions could still have a good effect on Nicaragua's domestic evolution. A conservative, private-sector opposition has been struggling to prevent a one-party state. Lacking the power, arms and popularity of the Sandinistas, the opposition's greatest potential asset is a role as intermediary with Washington. If the United States were to decide to slam the door on Nicaragua, it would prohahly doom this opposition. The time for slamming doors has not yet come. Nicaragua is still not "lost."

Cold War in a Family

What's to be done with Walter Polovchak? In January, 1980. Walter's father, a Ukrainian hus driver, emigrated to the United States with his wife and three children. He soon grew disillusioned: He couldn't find a job he liked; he didn't get along in Chicago's Ukrainian-American community. So a year ago he announced plans to return to the

His two older children, Natalie, then 17, and Walter, 12, objected and left home to live with their 24-year-old cousin in another part of town. The parents decided Natalie was old enough to make up her own mind, but they wanted Walter back.

At first the U.S. government helped prevent his return. The immigration service granted asylum to Walter, now represented by a prominent Ukrainian-American lawyer, The Polovchaks, with the help of the American Civil Liberties Union, challenged the ruling. And the state of Illinois, heeding urgings to keep Walter in America, persuaded a juvenile court to declare him a runaway, make him a ward of the state and place him in a foster home. The parents are appealing.

Walter's lawyers hint darkly that the parents are part of a KGB plot. And Soviet officials are milking the case for propaganda. A Tass dispatch had Walter's father saying that American authorities promised return of the children along with "a lot of money and a house" if he would stay in the United States. When Walter was allowed to visit after they lost custody, according to Tass, his mother found him escorted hy "two extremely gloomy characters." It added that "they surely poison him with narcotics."

Now really. Does the KGB recruit bus drivers for international operations, and the CIA little children? This looks more like a family affair gone political. Besides complaining about difficulties in Chicago, Walter's father complained hitterly about his nephew's efforts to lure the children from their parents, introducing them to American teen-age life and the Baptist church. This was particularly dismaying to the older Polovchaks, devout Catholics. ("Ukrainian Catholics," says a lawyer for the parents, look upon American Baptists about the way we look upon the Moonies.") And 13-year-old Walter is at an age that richly enjoys the role of pain in the neck.

American officials are to be commended for hacking away from involvement in the case. Whether Walter belongs with his parents is for the courts to decide. But this is no place for Cold War politics. Even if Soviet officials continue to exploit one family's unhappiness for propaganda, Americans should know hetter.

Reversing Social Policy

the United States of any hope they may have had that the administration would agree to a swap of responsibilities - the states taking over the full cost of education, transportation and the like, in return for federal assumption of welfare and medical assistance programs. The administration's agenda calls for giving the states more responsibility for everything. including welfare and Medicaid — prohably in the form of a block grant with a lid on federal contributions.

The simple arithmetic of budgets, taxes and deficits makes it obvious that the administration will be seeking over the next couple of years to unload the great bulk of present federal responsibilities, other than defense and Social Security.

The enacted tax cuts represent a revenue loss estimated at $280 billion over three years. The budget cuts come to only $130 billion, less than half the tax loss over the same period. If the economy doesn't do as well as the administration hopes, the gap will be still larger. President Reagan acknowledged in signing the tax and hudget bills that the administration will have to seek much larger additional hudget cuts than it forecast. More than $100 hillion in hudget cuts on an annual basis may be needed to hring the budget into balance by 1984 - three times as much as the $35 billion already enacted.

Where will most of that money come from? Almost surely from the remaining $85

The White House has relieved governors in billion that Washington now transfers to states and localities for education, housing, highways, welfare, revenue sharing and so on. With defense expenditures already scheduled for large increases, interest costs on the federal deht soaring, and hasic Social Security and veterans' benefits more or less inviolate, there is no place else to look.

For the same reasons there is little hope that the government will be able to transfer any of its remaining tax authority to the states even beyond 1984. Under the tax bill just signed into law, federal revenues will go into an even steeper nose dive then because many special tax breaks in the legislation don't come into full effect until after 1984.

This amounts to an enormous reversal in American social policy. In the last few decades the United States has moved steadily toward reducing some of the wide disparities in income, nutrition, educational opportunities and general living standards among citizens in different regions and localities. Most people have found that progress to be healthy, if far from complete. In the process, no doubt, states and localities have lost much control over their local destinies, and some correction of this seems to be in order. However, it is far from clear that the people are ready or eager for a return to the days when the basic needs of citizens depended critically on the wealth and generosity of the states and localities in which they resided.

International Opinion

Reagan and the Neutron Bomb

President Reagan has been running true to form. His latest international initiatives, and the Pentagon's massive new nuclear arms program, have again demonstrated his dedication to rearming America to match the Russians in all military fields, and his attachment to the time-worn policy of "negotiation from strength."

The neutron bomh has become a symbol not of military power but of political insecurity. It is a symbol and a symptom of the East-West crisis of confidence, for which the Russian military huildup in Europe and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan are largely to hlame, but which more nuclear weapons in the West will not cure.

Hitherto President Reagan, to the illconcealed anxiety of his European allies, has been more leisurely in his pursuit of negotiation than in his pursuit of strength. What now counts is the picture of each other's intentions and behavior which exists inside the heads of Presidents Reagan and Brezhnev and their advisers. The sooner the two leaders meet the better. .

LONDON -- Assured on every side that Great Britain is not faced with any real crisis, but likewise adjured from every side to make sacrifices to meet the crisis, the British public awaits the political decisions of the coming week with a certain natural curiosity not unmixed with un-easiness. When Premier MacDonald left Scotland for London tonight, he repeated his warning to the public not to helieve panic rumors and repudiated a suggestion published this morning that he was to issue a manifesto to the nation asking for a temporary all-round cut in wages and salaries. Flaming headlines, reminiscent of war days, are whooping up the now famous slogan of "equal sacrifice."

The Environmental Future Hinges on Local Politics

By H. Jeffrey Leonard

The writer is an associate of the Conservation Foundation and an affiliate of Princeton University's Research Program in Development Studies.

PRINCETON, N.J. — Several recent reports have warned that stresses on the earth's resources and environment are severe and increasing particularly in the underdeveloped countries. Most prominent is "The Global 2000 Report," issued last year by the Carter administration, which warns that unless something is done to reduce worldwide pressures on cripland, pastures, forests and mineral and water resources, the world will become even "more crowded, more polluted, less ecologically stable and more vulnera-ble to disruption."

Much criticism has been heaped on this report for basing dire predictions on in-complete and outdated figures and on the assumption that current trends will continue indefinitely. Critics have introduced alternate statistics purporting to show a dispassionate picture of population, de-forestation, descrification, species extinction, resource depletion and pollution.

In many respects, however, the report and its critics, suffer from the same

Invariably, deeply rooted political and dministrative structures and economic incentives induce the poor and not-so-

The improvement of the environment or the slawing of resource degradation may provoke intense opposition from various groups, rich and poor, who see their material interests, social status or time-bonored practices threatened. In a world where a multitude of diverse factors such as ethnic origins, class, ideology, family ties or geographical location are crucial in deciding such questions, it may be fruitless to speak of global environmental problems and international solutions. The global perspective also overemphasizes the degree to which developed nations, especially the United States, and international development assistance

A Letter From Guatemala:

The following excerpts are from a letter written between Jan. 5 and Jan. 7, 1981; by the Rev. Stanley Rother, a 46-year-old Roman Catholic priest who was shot to death on July 28 in the rectory of his mission in Santiago Atitlan, Guatemala. According to the Rev. David Monaghan, a spokesman for the Oklahoma City diocese, which sponsors the mission, Father Rother "learned in mid-January that he was targeted for death and left Guatemala for about three months." He returned on April 11. This letter, written to a friend of Father Rother in Oklahoma City, was made available to The New York Times by William L. Wipfler, the director of the human rights office of the National Council of the Churches of Christ.

THINGS have been pretty quiet the past couple of weeks until just last Saturday night. Probably the most sought-after catechist has been staying here in the rectory off and on, and almost constantly of late. He had been eating and sleeping here, and usually visiting his wife and two kids in late afternoon. He had a key to the house, and as he was approaching Saturday night about 7:45, he was intercepted by a group of four

Three apparently tried to grah him at the far side of the church. He got to within 15 feet of the door and was holding on to the banister and yelling for belp. The other priest beard the ruckus outside and stepped out to see them trying to take him. He considered trying to help, but was scared by their height. He called me from the living room where I was listening to music but also heard the noise, and by the time I realized what was happening, grabbed a jacket and got outside, they bad taken him down the front steps of the church and were putting him in a praiting car. In the overer that had him in a waiting car. In the process they had broken the banister where the rectory porch joins the church, and I just stood there wanting to jump down to belp, but knowing that I would be killed or taken along also. The car sped off with him yelling for help

Then I realized that I had just witnessed a kidnapping of someone that we had gotten to know and love and were unable to do anything about it. They had his mouth covered, but I can still bear his muffled screams for help. As I got hack in the rectory I got a cramp in my back from the anger I felt that this friend was being taken off to be tor-tured for a day or two and then hrutally murdered for wanting a better life and more justice for his pueblo. He had told me before, "I have never stolen, have never hurt anyone, have never eaten someone else's food. Why then do they want to burn me and kill me?"

He was 30 years old, left a wife and two boys, ages 3 and 1. May he rest in peace!

About 20 minutes after the kidnapping, 1 went to the telephone office and asked the police in San Lucas to investigate a car coming their way. I told them it was a kidnapping and that they were armed. They said that they would see about it, but they proba-hly hid instead. We heard yesterday that four or possibly five were kidnapped there that same night. Coming back from the call, I was informed that a fragmentation grenade was found in front of the church. It was probably dropped during the scuffling. That makes 11 members of this community that have been kidnapped and buried bere: there are possibly three buried in a common grave in Chimaltenango. They were picked up in Anngua and the following week I went to all the hospitals and morgues in the area and got a list of their characterisdes and clothing.

For these 11 that are gone, there are eight widows and 32 children among the group. These people are going to need emergency help. Others have had to flee also to save their lives, and to find work in exile is also to save their lives, and to find work in exile is also to save their lives. most impossible. They will also need help. Some of these have had salaries in the radio. artisan co-ops, bealth promoter, etc., and haven't been engaged in subsistence farm-ing. They will need time to find other means of income, and for the widows with children this will be extremely difficult. Leners ask-ing for belp are on their way right now to London, two different places, and they will very likely send some money. Helping these people could very easily be considered as subversive by the local government.

Be careful about sending letters here mentioning relief, etc. We never know when the mail may be intercepted and read. This letter is being hand-carried to the United States and I can say things that I ordinarily wouldn't using the local mails.

I am not ready to call it quits yet. What happened last Saturday was indeed scary and happened at our doorstep, but we don't know if his presence here with us will affect us directly. We have not received any direct or anonymous threats, nor are there rumors that we are considered imminent targets. Other towns in the diocese are being hit harder than us. In the past couple months. three priests of the diocese have had to leave because of direct threats, and two others got scared and left. All but one were foreigners.

This is noon on the 6th and I just got word that the army has vacated the camp they had outside town. Close to midnight last night before I got to sleep I heard some all army trucks go through town, but the know what direction. We can now density those trucks from way off, a distinct when of the engines. If it is true that they moved out, then the informers will now be some and looking for a place to hide. It could be that some guerrillas will come in how and take care of the leaders of the information. This is an interesting change of correspondences. The Benedictine priests in Solida had exiles from the left and the right at the had exiles from the left and the right with same time. But I don't know if I could die belp to one of these informers. I know that a few of them and some have been appared

It could be that the army group became recalled to help out in El Salvador became the war there is now picking up in intentity. This whole Central American area is in the process of change and if the government don't want to do it peacefully, then it will be done by war, It is sad hut it has to happing haven't been able to confirm the reptit that the army did move out. the army did move out.

Just say a prayer on occasion that we've be safe and still able to be of service to the people of God.

P.S. Guerrillas attacked the army come. In retaliation, the army picked up 17 toos people who were not involved in anything Their bodies were found in different paris the country. They, these bodies, were hady tortured, e.g., skin peeled off their faces atc.

Also two schoolteachers going home on their motorcycle stopped because the army was blocking the mad. They were india get back on their motorcycle and go back where they had come from. They did so and were shot in the back.

Those Air Traffic Controllers and the White-Collar Malaise

By Henry Fairlie

WASHINGTON — One of the difficulties about the strike question that is difficult to answer of the air traffic controllers is that discussion of it is too easily reduced to stories of bow someone narrowly missed death or permanent injury in the fog over this or that airport. Or, even worse, missed his dentist's appointment. Possible threats to travelers' safety and convenience are important. But the real public issue is the nature of such a labor dispute.

The inconvenience to the relaively small proportion of the population who fly is not a crucial matter. Anyone can avoid the danger to life or limb simply by choosing not to fly. But a strike of wellpaid, middle-class, highly skilled workers, employed by the government, raises some knotty questions. So does the response of the government in a free country to government in a free country to such a strike.

The administration has not yet found evidence of Communist, Trotskyite or anarchist influence in the logs of the air traffic con-trollers. It is true that, when one read that it had considered using AWACS aircraft in the strike, one wondered why it had not sent when asked about the police. And what about nurses or firemen or air traffic controllers.

The increase in the number of government employees is mainly an increase of white-collar workers. Government today is by and large a scrvice industry. Much gov-erament work demands technical or professional skills. Technology means that nurses are more than thermometer-readers, and policemen have to be more than the friendly cop on the beat. There is also a whole range of scientists or high-tech technicians in all kinds of government employment, or in some part-time rela-tionship with government. As our societies become more complex, it is less and less the manual workers who can throw a wrench in the works, hut professional workers or technicians. It is people in long white coats and not blue overalls who are in a position to be today's Luddites. When the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament was at its height in Britain, the most severe bombers in against the strikers in the first place and had done with it. But it has played roughly enough with the workers to cause some disquiet. The percentage of the total work force now employed by the federal, state and local governments in the United States is very high, and it is not going to be significantly reduced by the present efforts to cut back the role of government. This is true also of other countries that are technically advanced and therefore highly organized. If government employees are not permitted to strike, then the freedom of large numbers of people in our democracies is seriously limited, and it is not fanciful to wonder when other freedoms will be restricted. Freedom of speech and the right to engage in political activities can be as logically denied to government workers as the right

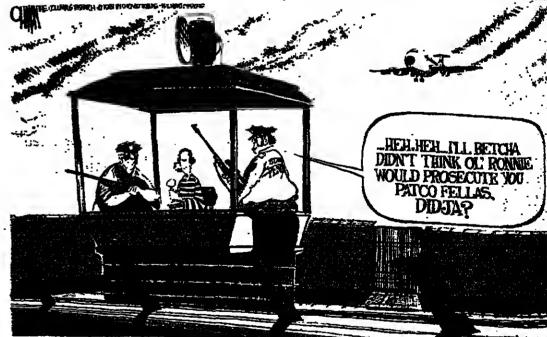

The action of the administration against the air controllers shows how careful conservatives must be in claiming that they are opposed to government interference in the lives of private citizens. Or one may legitimately ask if government

Discontent among white-collar workers is growing noticeably. It is the people who did not use to strike who are engaged in the most disruptive labor disputes: teachers, nurses, doctors, police afficers and even baseball players. Whether in private or government employment, these are the ones whose backs are now up. That some are highly paid surely paints to the fact that their grievances are strong.

Offices or schools or hospitals may not be as unpleasant as mills and factories. The employers may even provide soft lighting and inplants. Huge eucalyptuses stand in the corners of offices that are now described as suites. Wisps of ivy trail over the desks of secretaries. Casual dress is permitted, and there is group insurance.

Yet it is against their work con-ditions that the white-collar workers are most likely to be striking. No one seems to have noticed that the computerized technology in white-collar johs is more and more creating all the more disagreeable features of the assembly line. The yards and yards of printonts in white-collar work are as enslaving

"Where is my check?" goes the wild cry of the free-lancer in other wild. "It is in the process," goes the computer-

If the process is tying up the check, no wonder it is holding up the mail, and no wonder it is mixing up the workers. There is the process, and they go out of their minds. Workers of the world, unite. You have nothing to lose but your brains.

Process is exactly the equivalent today of the assembly line. The air received much sympathy for their complaints about the pressure of their work. Too much stress has been placed on the particular strains of their jobs. The simple fact is that in a more acute form they have to endure a pressure that is felt much more generally.

But then a further anxiety is added to the life of the white-collar worker. If the computer seems to be so independent - if the check makes its invisible way through the process, untouched by human hand until it is grabbed by the pay-ee — then is the worker not re-placeable? If the supervisors can run the show, who cannot do the joh? It is worrying if bosses begin to think that they can do a joh.

So when one reads that whitecollar workers are disturbed about their status, that they are begin-ning to organize in unions as never before, then one must conside that insecurity is a likely cause.

Status may seem a rather ingention and artificial thing to be worried about, but concern with status is a symptom of insecurity There is also the need for respect White-collar workers, simple because they are not on starvation wages, will be prickly about

Reagan Policies Suit Hard-Liner Fired by Carter

By Jane Seaberry

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Few events better illustrate the shift in U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union than the career of Larry

Two years ago Mr. Brady was hounded out of his sensitive Carter administration job in the Commerce Department
— he was acting director and deputy director of the Office of Export Administration. He was branded a rightist crazy and forced into relative obscurity after telling Congress that his bosses underestimated the dangers of the Soviet threat and their policies unwittingly provided the Russians with strategically potent high technology. Detente was in, so Mr. Brady was out.

Now, after an unsuccessful bid for the Republican nomina-New Hampshire and acting as a consultant for high technology companies, Mr. Brady is back—with an even higher Commerce Department position than before. He is helping President Reagan decide Soviet trade policy; and he has picked up where he left off in his criticism of the Carter administration's Soviet policy.

"The Carter people" never formulated a policy, said Mr. Brady, assistant secretary for trade administration. "Carter had a policy-level review. It never culminated in any decisions. There was a lot of ad-hocism, using foreign policy" such as Mr. Carter's decisions to halt trade in certain goods because of Soviet persecution of dissi-dents, its invasion of Afghanistan or human rights violations,

Mr. Brady said. "Carter had no policy. That's what bothered the allies, that's what bothered the Europeans," Mr. Brady continued.

But the strident anti-Sovietism that made Mr. Brady an outcast in one administration has made him an insider in the Reagan government. He and the president see eye-to-eye, "I wouldn't be here if that wasn't

Since taking office, Mr. Brady's staff at Commerce has wasted no time in devising tough new guidelines for ex-ports to the Russians and other Communist nations. Since coming to office, Mr. Reagan and his staff have rejected the notion of detente espoused by the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations for tough talk

One exception has been the lifting of the Soviet grain em-bargo, which Mr. Brady said not contravene :. Mr. Reagan's hard line, but was un-fairly hurting farmers and had outlived its usefulness. Also, Mr. Reagan this month authorized the sale to the Russians of 100 pipe-laying ma-chines made by Caterpillar Tractor. Former President Jim-my Carter had imposed stringent export controls on U.S. goods that might have strategic applications. The machines, however, will not be used on the controversial natu-

Many Seek to Anchor World Currency Float

By Steven Rattner New York Times Service

LONDON - Once again, the system by which the world prices its money is under fire. For a decade now, the international financial order has evolved a system that largely leaves the price yen, marks, francs, pounds, guilders, lire, pesos and cruzeiros to the ebb and flow of supply and demand. In many quarters, this system is applauded, but increasingly there are calls for reconsideration and for a return to what in any other market would be known as price controls.

In the market for oational currencies, those controls were known as fixed exchange rates, which set and sustained the ratios at which one currency was exchanged for another. For a quarter century, fixed rates were the norm of the postwar world. Then, on an August evening 10 years ago, Richard Nixon snapped the link between gold and the dollar's value, shattering the rock on which fixed rates rested and, in effect, forcing a reliance on the free market to set the price of currencies.

Now, an increasing number of experts are calling for a re-exami-oation of that system. A great many espouse a return, to some degree or another, to the old system of controls.

"The real question," according to Lord Roll, former chancellor of the Exchequer in Britain, "is the right combination of domestic monetary policy, exchange rate policy and inflation policy to get the benefits of flexible exchange rates without the tremendous volatility." Lord Roll, now chairman of S. G. Warburg, merchant bankers, favors a fixed-rate system with a built-in provision for occasional

Spectrum of Proposals

Perhaps most notable about the developing debate is the extreme spectrum of proposals about what to do. At one end there is the Reagan administration, which has declared its belief in still greater reliance on the free market to set currency rates. At the other extreme are serious suggestions for an even more rigorous gold stan-dard than existed before Nixon ended the convertibility of dollars into gold. In the middle, and perhaps most numerous is a clustering of experts who say they miss the greater certainty and the greater economic discipline that fixed exchange rates purportedly provid-As Exhibit A, critics in Europe point to the Reagan administration's use of mooetarism to fight inflatioo. It bas kept the United States' interest rates high, thus sucking funds from all over the world into dollars. The dollar's resulting strength has played havoc with their ecocomies, Europeans charge.

At the same time, however, other critics complain that the present system promises but in fact does not deliver such freedom. They complain that currency repercussions are as burdensome as ever, binding governments and restricting what they can do in the way of domestic policy. They say the world financial order has paid a price in the loss of certainty but has been denied the liberation that supposedly flowed from allowing rates to float on the tides of the marketplace.

The debate is hardly academic. In recent months, for example, Europeans bave watched their gasoline and fuel bills soar, no matter that the oil market is considered glutted. Oil in world trade is priced in dollars, and the dollar's surge has meant that the West Germans. the French, the Japanese, all must pay more at the pump. The same has even been true in energy-sufficient Britain: Its own oil output is priced to dollars.

Fixed exchange rates were said to impose a discipline because the consequence of stimulating an economy was an increase in demand and, with it, demand for imports. In the United States' case, for instance, the influx of products from abroad, as well as beavy U.S. investment overseas, left more dollars in foreign hands and thus created a balance of payments deficit to be redressed.

If foreigners held more dollars than they wished to, then ultimately they could appear at the Treas-ury demanding gold. In practice, an elaborate system of swaps among central banks usually en-abled the United States to settle its deficits by taking in dollars and handing back foreign currencies, but that worked only up to a point.

The only way to sustain a weak currency's exchange rate was for its central bank to stand ready to buy it at that price. There was always the danger that that bank was simply digging itself in deeper, emptying its pockets of strong currencies or gold to buy its own flagging currency from all comers.

Fixed rates were considered a vital beacon for world trade, Although legions of foreign exchange experts now belp multinational business hedge against the con-(Continued on Page 9, Col. 1)

"We shouldn't be quick about it," Willard C. Butcher said, "We dug ourselves the bole of inflation over 10, 15, 20 years, and it isn't going to get solved overnight."

Mr. Butcher said in a U.S. News & World Report interview that the slow reduction of near-record interest rates is the proper battle plan: "Given the virulence of inflatioo and given the fact that the oew laws are not even fully in effect yet, there's some reluctance among people io the financial community to shift gears very quickly," he said. "Frankly, I think they're right."

Mr. Butcher said the current tight money policies of the Federal Reserve were also correct for the current economic times.

"A purely monetarist approach to the cootrol of inflation will not

Mr. Tanner also said a concrete OPEC agreement on reunifying prices could entail the setting of official production quotas, which has cluded the cartel since its founding in 1960.

Saudi Arabia now accounts for almost half of OPEC's current production, which has plummeted to 24 million barrels a day from 31 million barrels a day two years ago in face of weak world demand.

AP-Dow Jones LONDON - The international bond market absorbed $640 millico worth of fixed-rate dollar debt this week without much difficulty. Nonetheless, investors were said to be wary of committing a lot of money to the market.

ers, scheduled to meet Oct. 28, and by Heileman shareholders, who re expected to meet Oct. 28, Schlitz officials said. The Heileman proposal calls for paying Schlitz shareholders $17 in cash and stock, while Pabst offer of $200 million in cash and $388 million in debentures was equal to $20 a share.

$15.50 offered. In the convertible sector, Daiwa

Securities' $50-million, 15-year issue bearing 5.75 percent met with strong demand. This could result in a reduction of the coupon rate when final terms are fixed next week by the syndicate manager, Credit Suisse-First Boston, market sources said.

Also under way via Yamaichi International Europe is a $20 mil-lion, 15-year issue of Alda Engineering, one of Japan's pioneers in industrial robots. The issue is expected to carry a coupon rate of 5.5 percent and conversion premium of around 5 percent.
International DM-denominated bonds edged lower during the week in slow trading. A $200-million DM, 10-year issue of the European Investment Bank bearing 10.5 percent was quoted at 98.5 of-fered to yield 10.75 percent after being priced at 99.5 by the manager, Deutsche Bank.

Eurofima, the intergovernmental agency for financing Europe's railways, is raising $40 million DM with a seven-year note issue at 99.25 bearing 10.5 percent to yield 10.66 percent.

Accounting Rule Obscures Profits Of U.S. Companies

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Ford surprised many analysts lest month when itreported a $60-million profit for the second quarter after six consecutive quarterly losses.

But Ford's earnings were really four times greater than that. The surge of the U.S. dollar against European currencies meant that Ford, in keeping with a controversial U.S. accounting rule, had to subtract $174 million from profits.

The opposite occured at Exxon: although its profits fell by 13 per-cent, the oil company reported a 77-percent gain in profits from its worldwide operations by following the same accounting axiom.

Despite the reverse gyrations, fi-nancial officers at Ford and Exxon reached similar conclusions. "It doesn't represent the true result of our operations," said Richard G. Bentley, Ford's assistant control-

"We find it difficult to attach any meaning to the numbers," added Roger Headrick, deputy controller at Exxon.

Large Distortions

Opinion about the accounting rule, known as FAS 8, is divided. But the wide swings in profits caused by the strengthening dollar this year have reinforced the opposition to what many regard as lopsided and impractical procedures. The companies have lived with the rule since 1976, when it was issued by the Financial Accounting. Standards Board (FASB), the accounting profession's rule-making

The dollar's rapid rise against many foreign currencies this year, as filtered though the accounting rule has caused unusually large distortions, many believe, in some second-quarter profits reports. The dollar gained 28 percent against the French franc, 23 percent against the West German mark and 11 percent against the British pound in the three months ended June 30.

As a result, many believe that the health of the multinationals' core business frequently is hard to determine. In some cases, such as at Ford, Sperry and Goodyear Tire and Rubber, last minute adjustments obscured what had been perceived as better results. In others, such as at Exxon and General Motors, the opposite was true. Small gains or losses were transformed into rousing increases.

In general, companies deriving large amounts of cash this year from European operations have been burt by the accounting rule, and those accumulating debt, such as heavily financed energy and chemical companies, have benefit-

The company's cash and receivables have increased in value because they must be translated at current rates, and are therefore worth more in dollars than originally. The other assets have not changed in value be-cause they are carried at historical cost. Payables are also worth more now (equity is the same), leaving $8 directly to XYZ's earnings.

The dollar's strength means that the subsidiary's cash and receivables are now worth a total of $10 less than originally. Inventories and fixed assets are unchanged. Part of the $10 is offset by decline in the dollar value of the company's payables, but still, assets have decreased by $10 and fi abilities by only $5. tinual risk of untoward currency fluctuations, the uncertainty leaves an edgy discomfort.

Even from hindsight, observers such as Lord Roll do not disagree with President Nixon's decision a decade ago to "close the gold window," nor do they believe the world could quickly revert to the old order.

Exchange rates, they say, can re-main fixed only when inflation rates among countries are roughly similar and when capital flows remain even. The huge balance of payments surpluses among oil exporting countries — an estimated $80 billion this year — create the potential for large capital move-ments that in a fixed system could quickly become crises. Similarly, some say that if rates had remained fixed and currencies tied to gold, the industrial world could not possibly have absorbed the oil price leaps of 1974 and 1979.

Indeed, the international monetary system was severely strained politically unacceptable.

Economists See Hard Road In Reagan Inflation Battle

By Robert D. Hershey Jr.

New York Times Service WASHINGTON -- Despite Friday's report that the government's Producer Price Index for finished goods — a rough measure of future inflation at the retail level climbed by only 0.4 percent, some economists say future successes against inflation may not be easy.

The producer price increase was a slightly better outcome than. many economists had expected and extended the dramatic gains that the United States has already made against inflation during the past year.

"It's a good indication that inflation is going to remain in single digits in the foreseeable future," commented David Ernst of Evens Economics, a Washington consultant. In addition, he said, subdued inflation means that U.S. consumers have more real buying power and this will help keep the economy, which now may not be growing at all, from sliding into a full-fledged recession.

Other economists, however, warned that President Reagan, who this week signed into law the pending and tax cuts for which he ought so hard, now faces a period n which further successes in curbng inflation will be increasingly rard to achieve.

Oil prices, they noted, may have topped declining, food may now save begun a long-expected sharp necesse and the international val-

But until investors believe the gains are permanent, economists say, rates will remain at nearrecord levels, thereby holding the economy in check so it cannot generate the growth that is required for the success of the administra-

The Consumer Price Index, for example, which rose 12.4 percent in 1980, is now expected to average only 8 percent to 9 percent this year. The Reagan administration, which in February estimated the CPI would rise 11.1 percent during 1981, last month revised this down

There is no clear consensus as to how to view exchange rate poliey," Paul Neild, chief international economist at Phillips & Drew, a London stock brokerage firm, said. Much depends, he said, on whether a nation has "an open economy or a closed economy."
The United States, where foreign trade remains a minor fraction of the economy, can treat exchange rates with an indifference impos ble in an export-oriented economy such as West Germany's.

Guidence Urged

The Reagan administration's response to Enropean alarm about the dollar was to amounce in April that the United States would eschew intervention except in a crisis. In addition, at last month's Otawa econonic summit, President Reagan all but ignored Europe's concerns. He amply said he expected inflation to recede and, with it, the current level of interest

That sort of response has led in turn to criticism, mainly from experts who say foreign exchange markets are driven by psychol and need official guidance. Recalling the Carter administration efforts to let the dollar decline to improve U.S. trade figures, Lord Roll called the Reagan policy a move from benign neglect to malign negleet." Hancock Settles Boston Building Windows Lawsuit

The Associated Press BOSTON - John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance has announced it has settled with four parties in connection with $64 million in lawsuits involving structural prob-lems with its 60-story home office building in Boston. The parties to the settlement, who included the architectural firm of I.M. Pci and Partners, and Libbey-Owens-Ford, said Friday they agreed not to discuss any terms of the settlement.

The various, interlocking lawsuits grew out of trouble with the skyscraper's 13 acres of 10,344 double pane glass windows, which began popping out of the structure even before workmen finished the building.

the saying that summed up the Nixon Treasury's lack of interest in defending the nation's currency - that the dollar was "our currency, but your problem."

Not everyone thinks that change is necessary. Among the champi-ons of the present system is Rimmer de Vries, chief international economist at Morgan Guaranty Trust. "Obviously markets sometimes overreact, but on the whole, I'm impressed with their intelligence," he declared.

One version of the renewed search for order has been the European Monetary System, which links the value of continental currencies while providing trading bands for a touch of flexibility. For European countries, most of which depend heavily on trade, the system has introduced a measure of predictability for businessmen and governments alike.

This has brought advantages to exporters and importers trading from one EMS country to another." said Thomas R. A. Lockett. assistant general manager at Midland Bank International here. "But what is possible and a relative suc-cess within the Community is not possible world-wide."

Search for Discipline

The search for discipline is a return to the gold standard. When currencies can be redeemed for gold - which has not been possible within the United States since 1933 — governments are prevented from printing too much money, a still stricter form of discipline. Exchange rates also become fixed; each currency is worth a set amount of gold.

"Paper money that could not be redeemed has almost always been accompanied by unbalanced budgets, high inflation and high interest rates," said Lewis Lehrman, a businessman turned economist and leading advocate of the gold standard.

As a testament to the strength of the gold movement, the Reagan administration has appointed a commission to study restoring the gold standard. The group includes Mr. Lehrman.

To be sure, not everyone is searching for a new order. Many experts have concluded that the rrent system is probably best, and that in any event, no shift back would be possible until tur-moil among world economies subsides, not now in prospect.

Marshall Nearing Baseball Return

United Press International
NEW YORK — Mike Marshall. a former Cy Young Award winner, has moved closer to a return to major-league baseball. He took a 15-minute workout Saturday with the New York Mets.

"We're having him come back," said the Mets' manager, Joe Torre, "and we would not be asking him back if he didn't throw real well."

Marshall, 38, was released June 8, 1980, by the Minnesota Twins, apparently ending a major-league career in which he had pitched for eight teams.

Marshall's career has often involved controversy because of his outspoken views toward the baseball establishment.

DEATH AND THE CREATIVE LIFE

By List M. Goodman. 172 pp. $17.95. Springer, 200 Park Ave. South, New York 10003.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

UNDERSTANDING death and coming to terms with it may turn nut to be one of our major achievements in the 20th century. In the last 10 years, there has been an enormous literature of death and, in a sense, List Goodman's "Death and the Creative Life" is like the conclud-what she offers is a means, an atti-tude, a technique, even, for domesti-cating death, for living comfortably and intimately with it. This is not as gruesome as it may sound; in fact, her book goes a long way toward eliminating the gruesomeness of death.

A practicing psychoanalyst and a teacher. Goodman, assisted by her students, systematically interviewed almost 700 people on the subject of death. They ranged from some of the foremost artists and scientists of our time through people at various levels of success and self-realization to those who saw themselves as failures drag-ging out wasted lives.

The Female Artists Refused

Right at the beginning of her re-search, she discovered a curious reaction - all but one of the famous female artists she wrote to refused to see her. Because it was part of her plan to compare artists and scientists, she was forced to abandon famous female scientists. With a charming bluntness, Goodman says she cannot explain the women's refusals.

She distinguishes three kinds of death fear — religiously conditioned, separation-abandonment and existential. They can be described as death in relation to God, death in relation to other people and death in relation to the self, which is the most difficult fear to assuage. Repression, Good-man observes, is the most common defense against death. Most of her subjects "hardly ever" think of it.

"I don't think people are afraid of death. What they are afraid of is the incompleteness of their life." Made by a 30-year-old man who was dying of leukemia, this statement is at the core of Goodman's approach to the subject. Because our longevity potential is about 150 years, we almost always die prematurely, she says, and that is one of the ironies of life.

She suggests, however, another kind of reckoning, substituting the idea of completeness for longevity, which is only a temporal completeness. If we live fully, Goodman argues, death comes to feel natural to us as a part of the life process, instead of seeming to be an "absurd" interruption. Starting with the proposition that we appreciate life most ardently when we are about to lose it, she reasons that a full acknowledgment of death would encourage us to value every moment of to death. Goodman has advance from an aphonsm to a strategy 22 artists and scientists who main focus of her book do not fear death, both because they a immersed in living and became feet that they have "completed"

She finds that successful artisideath positively and scientists a "slightly negatively." The long sense of fulfillment, she write more negative is the carrier of the street of the stre more negative is the rating go death by the subject — and is a well. Although no artists income see death as cruel, half the see do. The violinist Isaac Stern com his feelings toward death to the sion before a performance. "See is the most wistful word used by subjects about death.

"Fame asserts existence." man writes, echoing Emest a immortality is our basic more impulse, as well as our best at against death. "I love my work" of the successful artists and so say, suggesting that love, too, is a swer to death. "Whatever you a want." one scientist says, "you want it irrationally."

Goodman, who has an adven-mind, distinguishes between as i nal and an external expected death. Quoting Georg Simmel observed that in Shakespeare se nate characters succumb to me forces while tragic heroes. lowed to die from within," sie is us to take death in, to make it is ber of our family, even to leaving it as the final reward of all or is ing toward completeness. On boldest suggestions is that we our age by counting not fine forward, but from death help based on how much life we real ly estimate we have left to me a way, we would keep life, and le always in front of us.

Though "Death and the C-Life" is not thick in pages, it is with ideas, with life and with lengthe inspired way she thinks, to man illustrates her own assention we are never so much alive at we are in the presence of death.

TT is definitely more fun to counterattack with the Black pieces than to rely on pure defense, provided you can get away with it. The trouble is that the more aggressively Black plays, the more aggressively he invites White to play and that is often too much to cope with. Still, counterattack holds out the revitalizing prospect of winning the game, whereas pure defense aims primarily at not losing — a goal that can have a dampening effect on your thinking, carrying over to the next game when you have White.

As of this writing, in the U.S. Championship, Lev Alburt, a former Russian grandmaster who now lives in New York, has used the provocative Alekhine Defense every time he has confronted 1 P-K4. He was smashed by grandmaster Lubomir Kavalek of Reston, Va., but it's a good bet that the intrepid Alburt will continue to carry the Alekhine banner. Against Kavalek in the first round.

Alburt chose the sharp variation with 4...P-KN3; 5 B-QB4, N-N3; 6 B-N3, P-QR4, virtually forcing White to block the threat of 7...P-R5 by 7 P-QR4 and thus loosening the queen-

Baseball's greatest crisis of conscience — and its biggest public snafu — in generations, and perhaps in its history, began coming to a head last week as first the manager of the Chicago White Sox, Tony LaRussa, and then of the St. Louis Cardinals, Whitey Herzog, went on record stating the obvious: If they had to choose between losing a game and making the playoffs, they would find a way

In the last two days general managers and executives in Cin-cinnati, St. Louis, Baltimore, Texas, Philadelphia and Chicago (White Sox) have led a heated campaign to force baseball's leadership to reappraise the format of the split season. Not surprisingly, the same five teams, plus Texas, were foresighted enough not to vote for the split season in the first of the game to admit that a format was adopted with too much haste and without a full evaluation or discussion of the dangers involved. We must have the courage to admit a mistake and go about rectifying the situation." Under the current system, the last week of the season could — with enough bad luck — be a nightmare. As it stands, the winner of the first half of the season plays the winner of the second half in a new tier of playoffs. That sounds simple enough. And it is. The problems start if the same team wins both halves. In that case, the double winner would play the team in its division with the second-best overall winning percentage for the season.

Wagner's Telex The first cannon shot came from Dick Wagner, president of the Reds, who, reacting to stories that several White Sox players had said they would lose games if it helped them, fired off a Telex to every team in baseball, as well as its ex-

A double winner could throw games to help determine who it would meet in the playoffs. Or, a team with no chance to win either half, but with a lock on the secondbest percentage in the division, might want to lose a game to a first-half champion to ensure that it remains a champion.

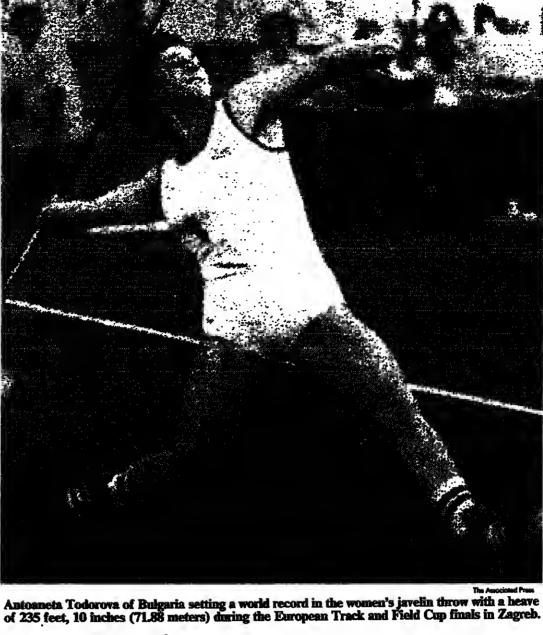

Scenario for Disaster

If Detroit led the division by a small margin on the final weekend, yet Baltimore led the Tigers in percentage for the whole season, then it would be easy to conceive cir-cumstances in which Baltimore would want to lose to the Yankees to belp New York become a double champion, thus putting the Onioles in the playoff. In the minors leagues, which have had split seasons for years, a double winner gets a bye in the playoffs, ending all problems. Ma-jor league baseball, however, never considered a bye in 1981 for two

First, it was unlikely that any team other than the four retroactive first-half winners would have any conceivable motive for voting favorably for a bye. Second, baseball wanted the certainty of a full eight-team playoff, which would mean more revenue for the players and owners as well as a heffy package of new games to sell to television. With byes, no one would know for certain until the end of the season whether the playoffs would involve four, five, six, seven or eight teams.

A Piece of Cakewalk

By William Safire

NEW YORK — "This is no cakewalk," said Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis about the air traffic controllers' strike. He was using a word that has come into sudden popularity in Wash-

When Director of Central Intelligence (not "CIA Director") William Casey went to Capitol Hill to extinguish a firecriticism, he used three figures of speech in rapid succession: "The hortom of the barrel has been reached." he said. "My life is an open book. This is going to be a cakewalk."

The first two are cliches, but the third is a delicious Americanism that had become a rarity until Casey rescued it. Far from heing current spookspeak, it finds it roots in the Civil War: Richard Thornton's "American Glossary" defined it as "a walking competition among Negroes, in which the couple who put on most style 'take the cake.' '

The high-stepping "cakewalk" soon attracted musical accompaniment: The walk became a dance, and the word was immortalized in Claude Dehussy's "Golliwog's Cake Walk." Soon the phrase came to mean "generally stylish" - Mark Twain called a Shelley hiography "a literary cakewalk." By the turn of the century, the cakewalk - one word - was a stage dance, drawing on the fancy walking of the previous generation, as well as a mechanized promenade in amusement parks.

At some point, it became allied with something easy to do or a pleasure to perform. A cakewalker was someone having a good time; this was not to be confused with a "cake eater," or effeminate man, that derogation hased on the preference of he-men for old-fashioned pies over fancy cakes.

While all this was going on in the United States, the British were using a similar expression to denote ease of accomplishment: "A piece of cake," along with "cakewalk," were expressions used hy Royal Air Force pilots to describe missions against weak defenses. The British prohably derived

"piece of cake" from "cakewalk": then the Americans of this generation dropped "cakewalk" and adopted the Britishism "piece of cake" — that is, until Casey revived the earlier term to describe what he was sure would be an easy time hefore a Senate committee. That's how the language refreshes isself: nothin' to it.

THE RIOTS in Britain this summer revived a word that has beome a favorite of government spokesmen: hooligan. Many reporters attribute the riots to a mixture of racial unrest, unemploy-ment frustration and "hooligan-

The Supplement to the Oxford English Dictionary puts the word in the challenging category of "ori-gin unascertained." Robert Burch-field and company have done a careful job: "The word first appears in print in daily newspaper police-court reports in the summer of 1898. Several accounts of the rise of the word . . . attribute it to a misunderstanding or perversion of Hooley or Hooley's gang. hut no positive confirmation of this has been discovered." A rowdy Irish family called Hooligan was featured in a music-hall song of the day, and Navy snobs later derogated the United States Coast Guard as a "hooligan navy.

A hooligan is a young street tough, a member of a gang; the three essentials of the word are (1) young. (2) organized to do violence. (3) in cities. "Hoodlum" -from the German dialect hudilump, or "wretch" — is the most frequently used synonym, hut has no youthful connotation. "Thue" from the Hindi name of a murderous religious organization in India — implies neither age nor ur-ban activity. "Ruffian" seems as bookish as "hlackguard," which has been dropped because whites can be rowdy, too. The Communists adopted the word "hooligan" in the Soviet Union, and you can hear the word pronounced as we do, in the midst of a streak of Russian, although often raised to the level of a way of life: "hooliganism How do hooligans describe themselves? Never as hooligans; rather, as demonstrators, activists, militants, dissidents or - if they want to add a connotation of thought - dissenters.

The 'Queen of Oudh'

Begum Holds Court in New Delhi Railroad Station

By Stuart Auerbach

Washington Posi Service
NEW DELHI — "Her royal highness —" highness will see you to-morrow at 5. Be prompt. She has other engagements." So spoke the young man in the Oxford University sweatshirt as India's monsoon rain cascaded onto him outside the New Delhi railroad station.

"Her royal highness," a direct descendant of the last ruler of one of India's great princely states, now lives in decayed grandeur in a fly-infested, 15-footsquare, open-sided portico of the train station with her son and daughter, surrounded for security by 10 dogs and waited on by two Nepalese servants.

They survive, they said, hy selling off their carpets and jewels. Wilayat Mahal, 51, the begum, or queen, of the long-extinct kingdom of Oudh, moved to the portico last year after being forced from a corner of the station's first-class waiting room. where she and her retinue had lived for seven years. The servants live in a shack in the hushes, from which they hring pots of tea to visitors.

"They know how much property her highness had," said Prince Ali Raza, 22, the young man in the Oxford sweatshirt, explaining why the family appeared to have the run of the grounds. For the interview, he had changed to a long, loose white cotton shirt.

"We prefer to sit over here." added the begum in her regal way, explaining why she had turned down offers by the Indian government of what she considered to be unsuitable quarters for her family.

Why, even my dogs wouldn't live in that," she said of one offer made in 1976.

Property Demand

Instead, she is demanding that India return to her all the royal property taken when the British unseated her great-grandfather, the Nawah Wajid Ali Shah, 123 years ago, and annexed what was then the kingdom of Oudh, "It was all Queen Victoria's fault," said the begum. But the Indian government, she said,

"does not have the character or capacity to give us anything."

Nonetheless, the begum and her children — Prince Ali Raza

and Princess Sakeena Mahal appear obsessed with their quest. They spend their days writing letters and petitions — Ali Raza took one to London last year for delivery to Queen Elizabeth II and filing writs on behalf of their cause. They act as their own law-

The cement floor of the railroad station portico — built as a carriage drive for VIP passengers to keep them from being buffeted hy India's teeming masses on the way to the trains - has been covered hy a large, though shabby, oriental carpet. A separate carpet covers a bench at one end of the portico, where the begum, dressed in sari and hlouse with a fur-trimmed shawl, sat fanning herself against the heat and flies.

Unable to Sleep

Folding metal gates provide security, and bamboo screens and potted plants provide a semhlance of privacy. There was no escape, however, from the noise of the station and the leaks in the ceiling. There are no ceiling fans to provide relief from the heat.

'If you say we haven't been able to sleep well for years, what with the noise and the hear, you would be right." said the prince. The entire family speaks English well. The prince and princess said they were educated by tu-They have stayed in the cov-memories and handouts. Some have managed to keep a portion of their wealth through husiness or landholdings, while others represent their former states in India's Parliament.

But many of the princely rulers - whose domains made up onethird of the country at the time of independence in 1947 - exist under considerably reduced circumstances. They were granted privy purses at the time of independence, hut these were withdrawn in 1971.

Portrayed in Film

The kingdom of Oudh, however er, did not make it to the end of British rule, and its survivors consistently have refused any privy purse. Oudh was annexed by Britain in the 1850s because, the begum said, her great-grandfa-ther "fought the Britishers." The British, however, claimed that the nawah wasted his time on wine, women and song instead of governing his kingdom.

The fall of Oudh - now part of India's most populous state of Uttar Pradesh — was portrayed in Satyajit Ray's film. "The Chess Players," which the begum denounced as "very insulting and highly degrading" to her greatgrandfather.

"It should have shown how much he fought the Britishers instead of how easily they grabbed the land and then the crown, added Prince Ali Raza.

Their princely home is in Lucknow, now the capital of Ut-tar Pradesh as then it was the capital of Oudh, and their greatgrandfather's palace there is now part of the All-India Institute of Medical Science. Other property of the former royal family is used hy the government for libraries, courts and picture galleries.

"They even transformed our palaces into petty political offices," said the begum as she ordered the prince to show lithographs of some of the property.

Now they have little left hut memories and lithographs, and Indira Gandhi's government shows scant patience with the former royal families - especially those emharked on such a quixotic quest ashe remnants of the kingdom of Oudh.

Bushes' Wealthy Frien PEOPLE: Busnes weatury Error

Wealthy Texas friends of Barba-ra and George Bush are raising money from private sources to redecorate the U.S. vice president's official residence on the grounds of the Naval Observatory in Washington, and one of the friends esti-mated that the fund could reach $500,000. A spokesman for the vice president said the public will not be allowed to participate; only the Bushes' friends will be invited to contribute. According to Peter Teeley, press secretary to the vice president, about $30,000 has been raised since Dorothy Craig of Midland, Texas, a longtime friend of the Bushes, took over the fundraising efforts. Teeley said the gifts will be tax-deductible and limited to $10,000 per donor. He said he did not know if the group had set an overall goal, but he expressed doubt that it is anywhere near the $500,000 mentioned hy Texas oil producer Earle Craig Jr. at a party in Washington last this week. "That figure is absolutely off the charts. You're only talking about four rooms." Teeley said of the three-story. 20-room white hrick mansion huilt in 1893. It is still owned, operated and maintained hy the U.S. Navy.

Frank Sinatra got a warm reception for his Brazil appearance, hut a major newspaper said Brazilians were paying too much for an outof-date product. The singer charmed a full house at a specially huilt 700-seat theater and supper cluh in São Paulo's Maksoud Plaza Brazil's most expensive hotel. Fans paid as much as $626 a head to hear Sinatra, dine on lobster and steak, and drink expensive scotch. But the newspaper Folha de São Paulo, in an editorial entitled "A Falling Star," said Sinatra had declined sharply from the peak of his career. In the typical fashion of "relations between the industrialized world and its colonies," the newspaper said, Brazilians were paying high prices for an "obsolete" product. A Brazilian manual laborer earning the federal minimum wage would have to work eight months to buy a ticket to Sinatra's show, the editorial
